The AlzChem image film presents the company as a group that focuses on know-how, research and technology – but that is also shaped by the people who work here. The four-minute video gives an insight into the heart of AlzChem, the production of calcium carbide in Hart, as well as an interesting overview of the company's other modern products. The main role, however, is played by the employees, whose commitment and community makes AlzChem an attractive employer who can look back on a long tradition and always has a vision for the future.

A six-member film team visited its production facilities in the summer of 2018. Based on a historical photograph, the film shows the production of calcium carbide in Hart and the transport of the first product of the NCN chain to Trostberg.

On this route, the train encounters other current AlzChem products at the various places they are used at. This illustrates the breadth of the range of applications that AlzChem's individual fields cover. When they arrive in Trostberg, the focus is on those who work here: international telephone conferences, meeting scenes and many individual portraits of employees reflect the diversity of AlzChem and its different areas of work.

The group picture at the Trostberg site as the final scene represents the community of AlzChem employees and the final aerial photographs show the beautiful countryside around the Trostberg Chemical Park. "The new image film offers an interesting insight into our company," explains Ulli Seibel, Chairman of the Executive Board of AlzChem Group AG. "It really shows who we are: a committed team from an innovative international company with strong regional roots and, above all, a clear view of the future."

The image film can be viewed at www.youtube.com/alzchem as well as on the AlzChem-homepage at the Mediacenter.
